Listening to “Where We Go”, the new single by Nick LaRiviere and the Best Laid Plans, we understand how experience (which does not only mean time on the road, but also sharing the stage with different artists) makes a hell of a difference in the final result of the set. of the work.

After all, we are facing a musically sophisticated work, but simple at the same time, and well-crafted, but objective. Nick, who is a talented trombonist, winner of the JUNO Awards (Canada's top music award), has toured the world and played with the likes of Paperboys, Michael Kaeshammer and 54-40.

Inspired by the classics of jazz and soul, the Canadian group can deceive the listener by demonstrating their deep-rooted influences. That's because they take them simply as references, but they shape their own sound, giving it a very current look and going far from sounding dated.

“Where We Go” is a semi-ballad, totally emotional and also takes on cinematic contours. Its pop vein, with an accessible melody and progression full of feelings, takes on a jazzy contour with the inclusion of a brass orchestra, and well-placed string arrangements.

It is a song that grows within itself and awakens joy in the listener, as if a beautiful day was about to begin and every obstacle that life imposes on us was being overcome. Not surprisingly, Nick was inspired by Spirit of the West frontman John Mann's fight against Alzheimer's, showing a particular vision.

E tem mais, além de ser um ótimo trombonista e compositor, o artista canta muito bem. Com uma voz levemente aveludada e natural, ele encaixa suas linhas na canção sem exageros técnicos, mas com uma afinação perfeita e equilíbrio ímpar. Além de Nick, a banda conta com Miguel Valdes no trompete, Barrie Sorensen no sax, Kelly Fawcett na guitarra, Attila Fias nas teclas e vocais, Louis Rudner no baixo e Alex Campbell na bateria.
